About NICWA

OUR MISSION
NICWA is dedicated to the well-being of American Indian and Alaska Native children and families.

OUR VISION
Every Native child must have access to community based, culturally appropriate services that help them grow up safe, healthy, and spiritually strong—free from abuse, neglect, sexual exploitation, and the damaging effects of substance abuse.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT
We help build tribal capacity to prevent child abuse and neglect through positive systems change at the federal, state, and tribal levels. By promoting prevention services, our programming supports the safety, health, well-being, and spiritual strength of Native children along the broad continuum of their lives.

TRAINING
We provide training, technical assistance, and professional development about Indian child welfare and related fields. From our annual conference—the preeminent national event dedicated to tribal child welfare and Native child well-being—to our trainings tailored for individual communities, NICWA provides timely and actionable information to those who serve Native children and families.

PUBLIC POLICY AND ADVOCACY
We advocate for policies that support tribal communities and their efforts to protect children, decolonize services, and employ cultural beliefs, traditions, and customs that are the foundation of safeguarding Native children and strengthening families.

RESEARCH
We conduct research and evaluation in service to tribal communities in ways that are sensitive to historical traumas and respectful of community needs, values, cultures, and traditions. We provide data to help inform services and advocate for funding for child welfare programs.

Dear NICWA Members, Donors, and Friends,

I am pleased to share with you the NICWA fiscal year 2023 annual report, Moving Forward for Native Children. This year was marked by our stalwart and emboldened advocacy to protect the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) when the United States Supreme Court heard Haaland v. Brackeen, the case concerning the constitutionality of ICWA. In November 2022, we gathered on the steps of the U.S. Supreme Court in a family-friendly prayer gathering surrounded by relatives and allies. Joined by many partners, we charted the Protect ICWA Campaign’s policy, legal, and communications strategies that later resulted in a historic 7–2 Supreme Court decision upholding ICWA. We grew as an organization with six new staff members and a hybrid return to the office. In April, we supported over 1,800 conference attendees, mostly frontline tribal child welfare workers, at our 41st Annual Protecting Our Children Conference in Reno, Nevada. The annual conference was our first in-person conference since 2019. It was record-breaking in numbers, a joyous return to a community gathering, a celebration of the strength and wisdom of our cultures, and a generous sharing of our collective knowledge.

In the following pages, you will find a high-level report of our community development, training, and public policy and advocacy work. In closing I want to highlight a special publication, the State of American Indian and Alaska Native Children and Families Report, released in this last fiscal year. This six-part series consists of data related to American Indian and Alaska Native child and family well-being, including economic indicators, adverse childhood experiences, child welfare system involvement, mortality rates and causes, and behavioral health and substance use. We heard high praises from many of you about the utility of this report for program planning, grant writing, and advocacy. As 2023 draws to an end, we’re grateful for all that we’ve been able to accomplish together through our activism for Native children.

Thank you for your support and partnership,

Sarah Kastelic
