

Biography:

Orlando Begay, a member of the Navajo Nation, was born in Monument Valley, Utah. Much of his artistic inspiration comes from his family members, who are basket weavers. As an artist, he learned the art of graphic design from Ryan Red Corn of Buffalo Nickel Creative. In addition to graphic design, his work has also included OB One custom shoes. He enjoys helping young men learn healthy masculinity, enjoys dancing in powwows, traveling, and learning how socioeconomic systems affect human behavior.

Artwork Description:

We, as people in today's modern society, sometimes lose focus on what is most important in life. It is easy to be led to believe that material wealth will make us happy, but the most "successful" individuals find that the best things in life are free, such as friends, family, and time. This painting is a reminder of what really matters in life.
